The tacts as brought out in the trial are as hours the jury brought in a verdict of follows: Feter Harwell, who was a citizen of Smyth county, had been run out of his neighborhood, having been shot from ambush, and having had his house burned to the ground, as related in the Disputch a few days since. He came into Wythe county and settled down on Children Badly Burned-John Bennington's land. The day after he arrived a message reached him that he was still in danger, officers are H. H. Garrett, master; James of the was just stepping out of his door when he received two rifle-ball wounds—one in the lung and the other in the abdomen—and fell back in the arms of his wife. He was carried into the hone and attended to, but died next.

They were met or overtaken by several persons in the open road, who simply bade them good-day or passed the usual courtesies. They were later recognized by a negro at his home on the road, who stated that the face of Sutton was blacked and Pendleton's was discolored yellow; that they asked if he knew where Harwell had moved, that he needn't be afraid to tell, for they were friends of Harwell. Further on they were seen with both their faces blacked skirting a piece of woods, but were not positively identified. After this Harwell's wife saw two men squatting down in the underbrush near her house and that was seen of any one about the premises until Harwell was shot, about a half hour after. Old Mrs. Barwell claimed to recognize Sutton, but her evidence was considerably that the lead recently by a horse running away and overturning his buggy.
